

Bal en Blanc? Or Bal en Bust?

By Sella d'Sivis, *Society
Columnist*

WROAT — The annual Bal en Blanc Masquerade, hosted by Princess Haydith ir'Wynarn, dazzled guests with glowing gowns, drifting illusionary snow, and enchanted white masks—but the night ended in scandal when a House Kundarak representative reported her House Medani bodyguard missing.

Critics wasted no time blaming the King's Ward's endless parade of parties. “When you host a gala every other week, someone's bound to lose track of their guard—or their dignity,” one guest quipped.

Princess Haydith remained composed, assuring attendees the matter would be handled discreetly. Still, the lingering question has overshadowed the night's splendor: How does a Kundarak bodyguard vanish at the most secure party in Wroat?

Rekkenmark'ed to Stand Down

By Lirae Wynn, Eastern Correspondent

Rekkenmark – Various Khorvarian sources say “Why have an academy breeding soldiers for war when it's over?”

Warforged Vote

By D'relle Rukaan, Social Issues Columnist

BRELAND – Parliment divided on Warforged voting rights.

As debated, the “Native-Born Brelish” language in the Charter of Rights has been highlighted by dissidents that since Warforged are not “born” it negates their right to participate in the vote

City on Edge: Grisly Murders in Middle and Lower Sharn Stir Fear

By Frin Tullis, Investigative Reporter

SHARN – A string of brutal killings in the districts of Fallen, Callestan, and Highwater has citizens on edge. Victims were discovered with signs of foul play according to Watch inquisitive Ilyra Kess.

Rumors spread quickly in Sharn's lower wards: whispers of Daelkyr cults, mind-twisted aberrations, or even a returning influence from the depths of Khyber. The Watch has insisted that there is “no confirmed Daelkyr presence,” but several witnesses claim to have seen hooded figures.

Meanwhile, King Boranel ir'Wynarn himself has issued a limited advisory urging citizens to “avoid traveling alone in lower-tier districts until further notice.”

Authorities encourage leads—and warn against vigilante action from adventurers eager to “clean up Sharn on their own terms.”

Want Purpose?

Lost? Need a purpose? Come to Aundair and help rebuild what was lost. Queen Aurala to provide a fair weekly wage and wine from the vineyards.

What we sow in effort, we harvest in good fortune