

House Orien Shocks with Lightning Rail Fail

By Davandi d'Sivis, Leading Correspondant

SHARN — A routine lightning rail journey from Wroat to Sharn turned into chaos yesterday when passengers reported black-robed assailants atop the train, allegedly attempting a kidnapping of a House Jorasco scion traveling in one of the passenger cars.

“I saw them—clear as mud—figures in black robes running along the roof,” said Gregoire D. Kind of Arcanix Academy in Aundair. “They were trying to drag the Jorasco guy out through the escape hatch.

Some transportation analysts have begun whispering that certain rival interests to House Orien may be capitalizing on the chaos—subtly noting that increased fear around rail travel tends to drive business upward toward other means of transportation.

Wildnight leads to wild nights

By Frin Tullis, City Beat Reporter

SHARN — Wildnight revels in the Upper Central Plateau turned grim when two Watch guards fell from a skybridge after reportedly drinking on duty during the festival. Both guards survived but remain hospitalized with serious injuries, a fact many attribute more to luck than preparation.

As one shaken witness put it, “In a city built on towers, our safety is not on point.”

After the War, a New Line Is Drawn

By Lirae Wynn, Eastern Correspondent

SHARN - Concern has sharpened around a small but increasingly vocal group calling itself the Corpus Vita Est, which openly condemns the government’s recognition of warforged rights under the Treaty of Thronehold.

Members have staged aggressive demonstrations and confrontations, arguing that “Live Brelish” are being displaced in their own city by constructs that neither eat nor sleep.

King Boranel warn that such rhetoric risks igniting already fragile post-war divisions stating that “Sharn survived the Last War by standing together. Turning on one another now would finish what the war did not.”

Dragonshard Heist Foiled en Wroat to Sharn

By Davandi d'Sivis, Leading Correspondant

SHARN - A daring attempt to steal a secured shipment of dragonshards bound for Sharn was thwarted yesterday when unknown assailants were intercepted aboard the Wroat–Sharn lightning rail line. The cargo, reportedly contracted by the Brelish Crown for arcane infrastructure repairs, was successfully delivered without loss.

Palace sources say King Boranel himself expressed “considerable relief” that the shipment was not diverted, as the shards were earmarked for critical projects in Sharn’s magewright districts.

Though House Orien praised its response, critics note this marks the second alarming incident on the line this season, leading some to wonder whether the events are connected—or whether something more deliberate is testing the rail’s defenses.

Clifftop Adventurers Guild

Looking for a purpose? Need to scratch that exploratory itch? We have a job for you. Come see us at Clifftop in Upper Dura. If you seek we can find.

Speak to Ruff Boldheart in the guildhall for more information.

Starting bonus to those that qualify.