

Lyrandar Heir Missing

By Davandi d'Sivis, Leading Correspondant

SHARN — A young heir of House Lyrandar has been reported missing under uncertain circumstances, prompting concern among the Dragonmarked Houses and quiet speculation spreads across the city.

The individual, described by a few family representatives as “a disgrace and an excoriate,” was last seen in Lower Dura near a known dreamlily den.

The disappearance comes on the heels of the recent attempted robbery aboard a House Orien Lightning Rail with House Lyrandar lapping up the market from those now afraid to travel by rail. Some speculate whether the two events are related.

Sale Sale Sale

Looking to stay alive in a city that never sleeps? The Tradefair Market in Middle Central has what you need!

“Why pay full price to survive?” asks proprietor Halden Vex, who assures customers all goods are tested, stable, and mostly safe.

Supplies are limited and moving fast.

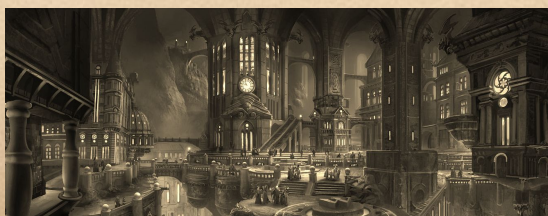

Knowledge Vanishes: Missing Tomes Raise Alarm in Sharn

By Prynn d'Sivis, Academic Affairs

SHARN — Concern is mounting among scholars after several rare tomes disappeared from the library of Morgrave University in Upper Menthis, with no apparent signs of forced entry.

University officials have downplayed the losses as “cataloging irregularities,” but faculty quietly admit that certain restricted collections have recently been accessed without proper authorization. Students whisper of private research circles delving too deeply into necromancy and the Draconic prophecy.

The Watch has opened an inquiry, though one senior librarian offered a more unsettling warning: “These aren’t books you lose by accident. If someone is gathering ancient texts it’s for a reason, none of them good.”

Sharn Reaches New Heights in Crime

By D’relle Rukaan, Social Issues Columnist

SHARN — Reported crime across Lower and Middle Sharn has risen sharply over the past two months, with Watch precincts citing increases in theft, disappearances, and organized gang activity. For many citizens, the surge has become a daily reminder that the city’s legendary towers are far less secure than they once seemed.

More quietly—but no less significantly—public frustration with the Brelish Crown is growing. Nativist groups have begun arguing that Sharn’s needs are being ignored in favour of Cere refugees and warforged patriation.

“It’s the presence of these metal automaton clankers taking the local “living” community’s jobs that’s causing this rise in crime” one local Nativist claimed, calling himself a proud member of Corpus Vita Est.

With a city built on vertical divides, even small shifts at the bottom can eventually shake the heights above.

Clifftop Adventurers Guild

The Clifftop Adventurers’ Guild has issued a quiet advisory to its members following reports of a shadowy rival organization operating in Sharn.

“Competition is nothing new,” one guild officer remarked, “but this feels different.”